

The general objective is to examine the regional effects of climate change and variability on various components of the hydrologic cycle with emphasis on land-surface-atmosphere feedbacks and their impact on extreme events using a regional climate model over South America.